THE WORK OF DEATH.
The body yields to Death's all-powerful summons. Below will be found the names of adult white Alexandrians who have died during the year, which will have run its course at midnight. The reader will find representatives of all classes, as the silent respect is no respecter of persons. In the words of the Chaldean patriarch, "the small and great are there." The certainty of the coming and going of the nervous, is no more apparent than the fact that an average number of our people are destined to fall every year by the stroke of the scythe of the grim monster, and those who preserve from year to year these mortuary records will be struck with the annual average of deaths in the community, should they take time to compare them with the years forming the past quarter of a century. The list portrays the sad fact that cradle has fluttered from several hundred doors knobs during the past three hundred and sixty-five days. Only the names of white men and women are here recorded. If those of children, and colored people who have died during the year appeared, it would be seen that about one person pays the debt of nature in Alexandria every day in the year. This death toll has been termed the annual tombstone feature of the Gazette, appearing as it has on the last day of the year for over a quarter of a century. During these years thousands have laid down life's burdens for others to take up. Generation continues to crowd generation from the earth, and this, we are told, will continue until the last enemy shall have been destroyed. "If a man die shall he live again?" was the query propounded in the masses of antiquity. It was answered centuries later by One who has declared himself the "resurrection and the life."
